

America

What have we become since our grandfathers died?
For our rights as a nation, for freedom and pride

That we couldn't see clearly it was all being lost
Our doors were unguarded as our borders were crossed

It was business as usual. No one could see
At the hands of these madmen our loved ones would bleed

We lost our resolve, and we now must renew it
Sanctions and U.N. coalitions won't do it

It's time we relearned what our grandfathers knew
Decisive, swift action is long overdue

At one time we all knew what it meant to be
An American citizen born to be free

We took pride in our nation and pride in ourselves
Our flags were on rooftops, not on store shelves

We must come together and fight for what's true
With blood and true grit, we must fight till it's through

When no madman or terrorist dares walk among us
Only then will America have freedom and justice

What have we become since our grandfathers died?
I hope we've learned something for the tears we've all cried

We must fight evil for freedom to stay
After our sacrifices and prices are paid

If we die, we die knowing our grandchildren play
In the land of the free and the home of the brave.
